America Unchained: Restorative Justice in the Age of Mass Incarceration

April 7, 2017

The award winning Social Justice Symposium is a day-long event to engage faculty, students, community members, and health professionals in dialogue to raise awareness of how social issues affect health. The Symposium is run entirely by students at the Mel and Enid Zuckerman College of Public Health at the University of Arizona in Tucson.

This year's theme is mass incarceration and restorative justice, topics may include but are not limited to: the school to prison pipeline, zero tolerance policies, unjust policing, prison services, women and children in the justice system, punitive justice versus restorative justice, and life after prison. We seek to understand the individual along with communities. We are looking to learn from individuals and organizations that participate, work, research and advocate for justice in law enforcement.

The symposium focuses on the following three objectives:

- Raise awareness about how social injustice impacts health outcomes
- Inform how policies can bring about inequalities and create barriers to health and wellbeing
- Inspire action that fosters innovative strategies to promote social equality
